

The Augusta National Golf Club: Alister Mackenzie's Masterpiece

The Augusta National Golf Club is one of the most prestigious golf clubs in the world. It is home to the Masters Tournament, one of the four major championships in professional golf. The club was founded in 1932 by Bobby Jones and Clifford Roberts, and it was designed by Alister Mackenzie. Mackenzie was a Scottish architect who is considered one of the greatest golf course designers of all time. He designed many other famous courses, including Royal Melbourne Golf Club in Australia and Cypress Point Club in California.
