The Structure of an Argument Essay

An argument essay typically has the following structure:

- 1.
2. Body paragraphs
- 3.

The should provide a brief overview of the argument that you will be analyzing. It should also state your thesis statement, which is your opinion on the argument.

Body Paragraphs

The body paragraphs should develop your thesis statement by providing evidence and analysis. You should use a variety of evidence to support your argument, including examples, statistics, and expert opinions. You should also anticipate and address any counterarguments that someone might make against your position.

The should restate your thesis statement and summarize the main points of your essay. It should also leave the reader with a final thought or impression.

Types of Arguments

There are two main types of arguments: deductive and inductive.

Deductive Arguments

Deductive arguments start with a general statement and then support it with specific evidence. The conclusion of a deductive argument is always guaranteed to be true if the premises are true.

Inductive Arguments

Inductive arguments start with specific evidence and then draw a general conclusion. The conclusion of an inductive argument is not always guaranteed to be true, but it is likely to be true if the evidence is strong.
